

Points of View

Points of View, provided by EBSCO, offers a series of controversial essays that present multiple sides of a current issue, as well as articles to support these essays. If you're writing an opinion or persuasive paper, or researching a controversial topic, start with Points of View.

campus login, use your college email username and password.

- You may choose to Search for your topic, Browse by Category, read In The News, read In The Spotlight or View All Topics.

- When reviewing the results or the page on a particular topic, you will see several tabs. Points of View will display opinion essays on your topic. These can serve as demonstrations of common arguments made on a topic, or examples of the format of a persuasive paper, but do not qualify as scholarly articles.

- Not all the information available under Periodicals is from scholarly journals. Pay attention to the title of the publication or ask a Librarian or your instructor if you are unsure.

- Each topic also contains information from Newspapers, Books, Primary Source Documents, Academic Journals, Periodicals, etc. All of the information in Points of View is available full text.

- Click on the title of an item to view its record. From here, you can select Full Text at the top of the page or Find Similar Results. To cite the article, click the Cite button on the right-hand side of the box. Select the appropriate style.
